Overview

The City of Charlotte along with the nation has experienced the most turbulent year in recent memory. 2020 was marked by a worldwide pandemic and increased strain on the housing market due to growing demand and supply side constraints worsened by pandemic response measures. The result is historically low housing unit availability in both the rental and for sale market. At the same time the City is experiencing the highest unemployment rates since the great recession.

Unlike the 2008 recession, this crisis is disproportionately impacting lower income renters. Charlotte immediately responded with rent, utility and mortgage payment assistance along with supporting City homeless service providers. This response continues. The growing cost of housing continues to increase the number of housing cost burden Households, especially at incomes below 80% area median income. Households at this income level struggle to find decent, affordable housing and high housing costs crowds out spending on daily living expenses such as food and transportation.

The City of Charlotte will continue to bring both federal and local resources to increase affordable housing and economic opportunity. City leaders share a vision with the community of an increasingly equitable city that offers a range of housing options in areas of high opportunity. At the same time, the City will continue to provide resources to protect and support Charlotte's most vulnerable populations.
